The Manner in Which the Brazilian Acgre Takes Advantage of Jocko's Appetite.

Once, while I was a cabin boy on a merchant ship, we stopped for several lays at Rio Janeiro, which gave me a plendid chance to look around that ry interesting South American city. But, being a true American boy, I didn't think anything there was as good as my home in New York, exept the monkeys and the parrets. About a dozen peddlers swarmed about the wharfs selling monkeys and parrots to the many travelers who came and went from that port. They had so many young monkeys and sold them so cheaply (I paid 25 cents for a little monkey and five cents for a young parrot) that my curlosity made me ask: "Do they raise them?" which question greatly amused a dark-skinned old Brazilian who spoke At least one-sixth of the locamotives unit in this country last year well-six.

"Old Grizzly," a California Character Has Killed Nearly Five Thousand in Revenge.

"Old Grizzly, of Tuolumne county, Cal., is so called because in 45 years he has killed 4,983 grizzly bears, and for the further reason that he was sworn to make the number 10,000 before he

Thomas F. Page was one of a backwoods family of 17 children. He says that he was born "no account." Drinking, lying, fighting, cursing and carousing, he used to go to San Francisco when gold dust was the medium of exchange. There one day he fell in love with a daughter of a prominent merchant and she looked with favor on him. She wished to reform him. They

He crept to the black opening, and, peeping in, saw his wife on the floor, with the figure of a man sitting beside her. In a blind rage he raised his rifle and fired at the figure. With a hoarse growl of rage a big grizzly bear dushed at him. Twice more the repeating rifle awoke the echoes, and the great car

And the voice of his wife was still. Only fragments of bone and flesh showed where death had come to the It was then that fate exacted the great reckoning of Thomas Page. He buried his dead and left the haunts of men. He made a vow never to speak again to a fellow man. He swore to avenge himself by devoting his life toward exterminating the grizzly bear. In the mountains for more than 45 years he has been on the trail of the great creatures and he has been a nemesis that few have escaped.

BUILDING GOOD ROADS.

Excellent Object Lessons Given Annually by the United States Department of Agriculture.

The good roads question is to-day the subject of a vast agitation, begun first by wheelmen, taken up by the government, and now a matter of leg-islative consideration the country over. As a result, ten states have exhibits at the present universal expo-sition in aris illustrating how perfect roads ought to be built. This from a country that still has, in part, the worst roads in the world, is rather daring, but it is also an indication of what is being done. The ten states in question know what they are talking about. They had the worst roads, and now they have (or, at least, they are constructing) the best. It will be a matter of news to many to learn that the United States govtion in the united States government has gone into the road question in the most energetic and thorough manner imaginable, and having through the department of agriculture, studied what constitutes a good and who was a state of the state o road and why good roads are needed, has gone to work to spread the information and teach the people. It has experiment stations in every state in the union, where lessons in roadmaking are taught. Hundreds of pamphlets showing just how a good road is constructed and how it may be preserved have been published by the government, and may te had for the salding. Object, the construction of the salding objects the saldin asking. Object lessons in road building are given annually in every state in the union, when in some worst some tions a quarter or half, or even a mile, of excellent roadway is constructed, and the people shown how and why it ought to be done. These object lessons, begun in 1894, have done more than anything else to start the great movement which is now furthering the construction of perfect roads the land over. The government, in these exhibitions, ordinarily constructs three spec-imen roads—a modern macadam, a sand and n ordinary dirt road. When these roads are completed, a heavy farm wagon, loaded with produce, is drawn over each of them, and the amount of force required to haul it is determined by the use of a trackometer. This instrument is so constructed as to acurately register every pound the horses pull at every stage of the haul in plain view of those in its vicinity. It is made clear by these experiments that a team harnessed in the ordinary way is subject, under the best conditions, to a continuous jerking motion, which must, on even the smoothest country road, greatly increase its fatigue. On a dirt road in bad condition this jerking becomes a succession of heavy plows transmitted to the team by means of a collar. They are cruelly painful, bruising the shoulders, harassing and torturing the animals, constantly lessening their value as well as directly decreasing the amount of the load that it is possible to haul.

Cement Floors for Dairies.

In the creamery and in the dairy the old wooden floor should give way to the cement floor of the best quality. The movement in this direction is already on and the cement floor has become very general. Especially in the creameries is this the case. The wooden floor absorbed moisture and odors and gave out the latter again reenforced. The wooden floor has been found impossible to keep clean. It is so constantly wet that it has no chance to be purified by the air. The same is largely true of the floor in the private dairy. In the largest milk selling establishments in Chicago the cement floor is considered an essential, as a large quantity of water is daily used in flooding the floors to insure cleanliness. In the long run the cement floor is cheapest.

for it will outlive several wood floors that are daily soaked with water .-Farmers' Review.

Science of Seed Sowing. It should not be forgotten in sowing vegetable seeds, and, for the matter of that, all seeds, that they must have air, moisture and darkness in order to sprout properly. If sown deeper than they desire they rot; if too shallow, the light is too intense or they do not get moisture enough. As a rule they should be as near the surface as posible, with the rather dry earth packed around them as firmly as possible. The surface earth should be rather dry or it will not powder well-and this is important in connection with air. There is no air in a soil pressed when wet-but the more dry earth is pressed and pounded the finer and more porous it becomes. There is a great art in getting seed to grow properly-and yet the art is very simple when the principles are understood. - Mechan's Monthly.
